Today, the ability to speak foreign languages is an integral part of our lives. Due to the high rate of cooperation with foreign partners, specialists in various fields have a high demand for language learning. Such knowledge is first acquired in pre-schools and schools, and later in institutes, training courses, or by learning a foreign language independently. Success in achieving this goal depends on the practical methods and skills of teachers. The ability to use information technology and modern teaching methods helps to quickly understand new materials. By combining different approaches, a teacher is able to solve specific curricula. In teaching English, a step-by-step approach based on the ability and level of the learner, and the age of the learner, will give good results. Psychologists believe that children learn languages faster and easier than adults.

Recently, there has been a huge increase in the number of people of all ages learning English. And the reason is that in the course of life, it's getting harder and harder to live without knowing English. But language acquisition is also a matter of age. In fact, scientists have proven that children learn languages faster and easier than adults. The main reasons for this are the natural tendency of children to learn language, their ability to imitate, the fact that they have more time than adults, and the fact that they retain information quickly.

Masaru Ibuka, one of the great Chinese inventors, wrote in his famous book After Three Nights that a child's brain can hold an infinite amount of information. It's also important to note that when children are six or seven years old, they're memorizing information mechanically, not by understanding what it means. That's why we shouldn't start teaching English to elementary school students by giving them grammatical concepts. Otherwise, learning a foreign language can exhaust the child from the very beginning and reduce their interest in learning the language. Because teaching a foreign language to elementary school students is one of the most difficult, but also one of the most responsible tasks. Therefore, the following innovative methods can be used to teach English to elementary classes in a meaningful and interesting way:

Rival includes most games that help you learn grammar and vocabulary. In this, the children do a variety of assignments given by the teacher. As a result, there is competition among students, and the interest in learning a language increases. Because, as the Chinese thinker said, "All human interests are generated by competition".

Blending techniques are where we can voluntarily combine different techniques. For example, children playing games, singing songs, drawing pictures It's a way of expressing new words through gestures. The advantage of technology is diversity. The student is not limited by just one thing.

Teaching through cartoons. You know, kids love to see all kinds of cartoons. And in the process of watching cartoons in English, even though he doesn't understand the words in the cartoon, he tries to understand the words the cartoon characters are using through their actions. This is a fun and effective way for children to learn a language.

In conclusion, teaching a language to elementary school students is not a duty, but rather a fun game and an innovative method that can serve as a foundation for their future learning. So, while the education system is trying to create a free-thinking, well-rounded, mature individual, we, the teachers of the future, can do our part by developing more sophisticated ways to use innovative technologies more effectively.
